FIRE EXTINGUISHERS

FIRE EXTINGUISHER U.L. RATING

The UL rating on an extinguisher is a group of letters and numbers, e.g., 1-A;10-B:C. The letters indicate the TYPE of fires on which the extinguisher is effective. "A" - Wood, paper, cloth, rubber and most plastics. "B" - Flammable liquids, e.g., gasoline, oil, grease, kerosene, and solvents. "C" - The extinguisher can be used safely on fires in live electrical equipment. The agent is electrically non-conductive. The NUMBER in front of "A" or "B" indicates the AMOUNT of that type fire the extinguisher can put out. "C" never has a number. In the UL test for a "B" rating, fires are lit in square pans containing heptane fuel 2' deep floating on water. To achieve a 10-B rating, the extinguisher must put out a 5' x 5' pan fire (25 sq. ft.). A 5-B fire is half that size. The 40-B rating is given to extinguishers which put out 10' x 10' pan fires (100 sq. ft.) - 4 times as much as a 10-B unit and 8 times more than those rated only 5-B. UL determines "A" ratings by testing extinguishers on fires in upright wood panels that are built of 1" x 6" lumber covered with 2 layers of 3/4" furring strips. Excelsior is piled at the base and the panel is ignited and allowed to burn for 5 minutes. To earn a 1-A rating, the extinguisher must put out an 8' x 8' panel fire. For a 2-A classification, the unit must extinguish a 100 sq. ft. fire (10' x 10" panel). For 3-A (12' x 12'), 4-A (14' x 14'), 6-A (17' x 17'). For complete details on UL classifications and testing methods request UL 711 from Underwriters Laboratories, Publications stock, 333 Pfingsten Rd. Northbrook, IL 60042.
